BRINGING A NEW PET HOME!

Introducing Your Pet

NEW!

Your pet will eventually become a comfortable member of your family. But this may not happen right away. If you have children or other pets, you'll want to introduce her to them gradually and start in a safe room. Safe rooms not only promote a way to bond with your pet but instead when you Pet gets scared it will always go back to their safe room instead of running outside.

Meeting the Kids

Children must understand that your pet is a sensitive, living creature. If she's frightened, she may resort to scratching or biting to protect herself, so it's important she is handled gently. Younger children might be inclined to pull her tail or ears, squeeze and poke her like a toy, or make loud noises around her. Teach them not to do these things right away.

Meeting the Pets

You view your pet as a great new companion for your other pets. But they might view her as a threat, so introduce them with caution and care. Make the initial introduction short and sweet, removing the pet after a few minutes. An older cat will likely accept the newcomer and eventually help take care of her. However, until this happens, you should avoid leaving them alone together. Most dogs and cats get along, though it may take a little longer. Monitor their playtime to avoid scuffles, hissing, or barking, until they become good friends.

How do you successfully introduce a new cat into your household if you already have other pets? As cats can be territorial creatures, bringing a new pet home to meet Fido or Fluffy can be a hair-raising experience for not only the owner but also the resident pets if not handled correctly. A peaceful relationship between new and existing feline or canine housemates requires time, patience and work. The introduction process generally takes a few weeks before the pets are all cohabitating peacefully. At times, though, it can take several weeks. The trick is to do it slowly and cautiously
